

How Will History Judge Us in This Time of Crisis?

The COVID-19 crisis has brought out the best and the worst in humanity.

On the one hand, doctors, nurses, and hospital aides are risking their lives every day by caring for the sick. On the other hand, some selfish people are hoarding essential supplies and even profiteering. We can pray that they may regain a sense of responsibility toward others.

I've recently seen two scenes on television that have stayed with me: One testifies to the goodness of people; the other testifies to the selfishness of people.

The first pictures a woman who celebrated her 100th birthday in a senior citizens home in California. Prohibited from entering the facility, her guests – children, grandchildren, and friends – gathered outside her window holding signs and singing songs to her, even though they knew she couldn't hear them.

to the people who had come to honor her on her birthday. You could see the joy and the pride on her face.
