Each Sugarman's story, as she embodies the commitment to social justice for which we should all strive.

Shabbat Shalom, Columbus ❤️

It's been a week of reflection for our community. We want to share Debbi Dach Sugarman's story, as she embodies the commitment to social justice for which we should all strive.

"People are hurting, and not only from the pandemic. Covid-19 acts as a stage that brings to light many of the pre-existing, fundamental flaws in our society: antisemitism, systemic racism, police brutality, income inequality, under-funded school systems and so much more. As Columbus residents in this moment, we are acutely aware of the pain we feel as individuals, as well as the pain felt by our neighbors that we can't fully understand." Says Debbi Sugarman.

"Amidst all the profound turmoil in our world today — the public health crisis, widespread economic distress, police brutality, political unrest, frustration and anger — it's easy to feel hopeless. This is one of the hardest times to give back to the community. But, it is also a time when tzedakah — the very act of generosity — can restore direction and meaning for those who feel lost. When you give to JewishColumbus, you become a beacon of hope and an agent of change. Together, we can traverse the uncertain terrain that lies ahead."

Join community leaders like Sugarman by donating to our annual campaign. Your contribution — no matter the scale — represents your pride in Columbus' Jewish community. When you give to JewishColumbus, every dollar makes a difference.
