

How to Make Immigration Justice Central to Your Passover Celebration

As we gather around our seder tables this year, we will reflect on our people's liberation from the degradation of slavery in Egypt.

We recall with gratitude that many of our more immediate ancestors – or we ourselves – were offered refuge from persecution by the United States and Canada, while knowing that some in our community have also experienced the pain of discrimination in North America.

If we are to heed the call of freedom that Passover offers us, we must not close our eyes to the degradation currently taking place right outside our doors.

Even before the global health pandemic, the U.S. federal government had implemented draconian reductions in the numbers of refugees permitted to

179
Shares

